'The Growth of Community Life" was the subject of an engrossing address made by Dr. S. C. Mitchell yes terday afternoon before the Woman's Club. Dr. Mitchell is a brillant scholar and he brought the rich fruit of hi, own bright intellect for the delectation of his audience yesterday. He said that he simply intended to talk a little while about certain social tendencies in the South and his lecture.

whole nation. Dr. Mitchell spoke of the work of women and women's clubs towards the development and growth of the modern community life. He developed, in turn, the need and use and strength of turn, the need and use and strength of clubs, schools, churches, houses and libraries, as potent factors in the extension and progress of such a life, and stated that the South, gathering up all the clements of greatness in the old, was pressing forward to yet wider fields of achievement.

the wifle about certain social tendencies in the South, and his lecture was certainly a very live one.

Here, social progress is in more ferment than any other portion of this country, and the speaker dealt mostly with a real attempt to point out tho main current of the life of to-day. He drew a vivid contrast of the old South and the new, with the factors upon which its civilization was constructed, and touched at length upon the various organs and senses that compose the body and soul of community life. Community, in its modern acceptation of the word, is something more than a collection of houses, for every community has a soul, and these together affect the whole nation.
